The constellation Taurus is hard to miss as he charges through the northern winter sky. "The bull" is one of the most noticeable constellations and one of the oldest documented constellations, with descriptions of Taurus going as far back as the early Bronze Age. Taurus is most famous for its red giant star.

Gemini is Latin for "Twins," and it is one of the few constellations that actually looks like its namesake. Gemini is one of the Zodiac constellations and one of the 48 constellations described by the 2nd century astronomer Ptolemy. Its is located northeast of Orion, and between Taurus and Cancer on the elliptic. Best viewing is during February. By April and May, the constellation can be seen soon after sunset in the west.

Cancer lies between Leo, the lion, and Gemini, the twins. It is almost impossible to see Cancer as crab with the naked eye or even binoculars. It looks more like a faint, upside-down Y. Cancer is visible in the Northern Hemisphere in the early spring. It can be seen in the Southern Hemisphere during autumn.

Pisces, named for the Latin plural of fish, occupies 889 square degrees, making it the 14th largest constellation overall. While it is a fairly large constellation, its stars are faint- none are brighter than fourth magnitude- making it challenging to see in the sky with the naked eye. Pisces also contains a Messier object- which are galaxies, nebulae and star clusters recorded by 18th Century French astronomer Charles Messier.
